

My Date With A Vampire – Episode 2

Things Aren't As Simple As You Think They Are

---

Tin Yau: You didn't ask me here just to see the snow, did you?

Siu Ling: Did you see those things last night?

Tin Yau: Then did you?

Siu Ling: The Hong Kong police are so impolite. I asked you first so you will have to answer my question before asking.

Tin Yau: Hong Kong policemen have names. I'm Fong Tin Yau.

Siu Ling: I'm Ma Siu Ling. (pause) Don't think you have nothing to fear just because you're a policeman. Things aren't as simple as you think they are.

Tin Yau: I've never done anything against my conscience hence I have nothing to fear. I believe there is justice on earth. All right, it's time we get back on track. What do you want to talk about?

Siu Ling: You seem to be very interested in the photograph I took last night. Do you wish to know what it was?

Tin Yau: If you wish to let me know, then do so. If you want to talk terms, I'd rather not know.

Siu Ling: If you want someone to show you a photo, it is only right that you repay that person.

Tin Yau: But a normal girl would not go around the hotel to take a photo of the ghost. What exactly are you doing?

Siu Ling: Cleaning business. Wherever is unclean and as long as I'm paid, I'll make sure the place is cleaned.

Tin Yau: In that case I suppose you've not commenced work last night...

Siu Ling: I don't like to start work before I'm paid.

Tin Yau: Will you let me speak to 'it' before you 'clean' the place?

Siu Ling: Don't you have better things to do? You came to Japan just to get a ghost's statement?

Tin Yau: Do you know how she died?

Siu Ling: You can say it but I've nothing in return for you.

Tin Yau: 20 years ago, before this hotel was re-built, there was a girl called Chor Chun. She was working here. One day she was found dead near the geyser. There wasn't a drop of blood in her body. Yesterday was her 20th death anniversary.

(Siu Ling shows Tin Yau the photograph.)

Siu Ling: Then, is this Chor Chun?

Tin Yau: Maybe.

Siu Ling: Are you thinking of investigating this 20-year-old case?

Tin Yau: If my deduction is correct, she must have died horribly and hence her spirit can't rest in peace. Don't you want to help her?

Siu Ling: Do you know the solution for a wandering spirit? A person who died with unfinished business will remain in the human world as a spirit. What it wants to do is to cause misery for others. It'll even resort to killing people just to appease itself, and because of this, its sins get deeper. The only way to help it is to prevent it from committing more wrongs. It must be captured, appeased by a monk and then we have to burn its favorite belonging to it. But of course if there's no money, then there's nothing more to talk about.

Tin Yau: In that case, what do you want in return so that I can ask Chor Chun a few questions? Of course, as long as it's within my means, I'll definitely help you.

Siu Ling: You said it. (Siu Ling wants Tin Yau to take care of Zhen Zhen while she goes to meet San Boon Long Yat)
